

I was so happy to be able to stop telemarketers, and now you are thinking of letting some business to harass people after they drop a service? Most people drop a service because they found something better or were unhappy for one reason or another and as a customer myself the last thing I would want is the service provider to harass me for months after I have thought I had gotten rid of them. I would like to add charities to the no call list. They call my elderly parent all the time and he just says yes after being pestered and then they have your number and repeatedly call and call. That is harassment, I have even tried having them stop and they don't, so in my book they are as bad as telemarketers. So please do not allow these service providers to harass ex-customers.

Thank you for your time.

Pam Wensel